BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library (August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

POPS ARE COMING
Monday Evening, May 3rd
SYMPHONY HALL

With the advent of May, there is a sudden change in the musical activities of this city,—gone are the serious concerts and recitals, and just as suddenly and completely, the Pops are with us.

The formal rows of seats are stowed away in the cavernous darknesses of Symphony Hall. Sociable informality abounds. Flowers decorate the stage, and tables fill the entire floor. As the Pops Orchestra thrills with a rhapsody or swings into a Strauss waltz, the Pops patrons each night sit about their tables, and perhaps chat over their ice cream or "Pops Punch." For Conductor Agide Jacchia does not command silence —he persuades it with the spell of his music.

The Pop concerts have been going on for forty years—almost as long as the Boston Symphony Concerts from which they sprang. The eighty Symphony players which comprise the Pops Orchestra are ruled by Agide Jacchia, who is about to open his tenth season as the most popular of all Pops conductors. The Pops repertory is of the widest, extending from symphony movement to a sugary trifle. Through these extremes and the intermediate gradations, the fine standard of performance by the orchestra under their highly talented conductor, is constant.

FIEDLER CONDUCTS AT POPS TONIGHT

Arthur Fiedler, Boston-born musician and prominent member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is to conduct the final Pops concert in Symphony Hall tonight in place of Agide Jacchia, resigned.

ARTHUR FIELDER

Mr Fiedler will be the first Boston-born musician in the history of the Pops ever to conduct this orchestra.

Mr Fiedler is 32 years old. He was born in Boston Dec 17, 1894. He studied at the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin for several years. He is the son of Emanuel Fiedler of Berlin, Ger, who was a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 25 years.

Arthur Fiedler is well known not only as a member of the B. S. O. for 11 years, but also as a coach and accompanist for internationally-known concert artists. His versatility is also shown by his mastery of the violin, viola, piano and organ.

Mr Fiedler has conducted in Berlin and has directed many concerts in New England. He is a bachelor.

AGIDE JACCHIA TO FOUND NEW 'POPS'

a typewriter copy of pieces that must be present in the orchestra for proper balance to the management. I told them that they might excuse some men, but it was imperative that these pieces be always present. They have completely ignored it time and again. They are ruining the Pops and my heart is broken."

During the interview Mr. Jacchia was visibly affected and showed it by the tremor in his voice, the shaking of his hands as he lighted a cigarette and his nervous walking up and down his apartment. His wife and family left for Europe last Friday and he leaves to join them on Tuesday.

William H. Brennan, manager of the orchestra, when interviewed last night concerning the action of Mr. Jacchia, said he had nothing to say other than that Arthur Fiedler would lead the "Pops" on Saturday night.

RESIGNATION ACCEPTED

Frederick P. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said the resignation of Mr. Jacchia had been received and accepted. As to the latter's statements concerning the size of the orchestra, Mr. Cabot said it was as large and well balanced as at any time during the closing concerts for the past nine seasons in which Mr. Jacchia has conducted. Mr. Cabot's statement follows:

"I have seen a statement made to the press this morning by Mr. Jacchia's secretary relative to Mr. Jacchia's refusal to conduct the closing concert of the present season of Pop concerts.

"Last Saturday morning the orchestra's management received a letter from Mr. Jacchia expressing dissatisfaction with the size of the orchestra for the closing concert, July 3. It was at once pointed out to Mr. Jacchia that the orchestra for the closing night this season would be as large and as well balanced as the orchestra had been during the closing concerts for the last nine seasons which Mr. Jacchia has conducted. In fact, the orchestra is quite a little larger this week than has been the case in many concerts under Mr. Jacchia. The quality of the membership of the orchestra is well known and needs no defense.

REQUEST JACCHIA TO RECONSIDER

"This week Mr. Jacchia sent a second letter to the management specifically stating that he would not conduct the concert on July 3. The management replied that they had no authority to modify Mr. Jacchia's contract, and the hope was sincerely expressed that Mr. Jacchia would not act upon his suggestion. On Tuesday night of this week Mr. Jacchia wrote another letter repeating his intention not to conduct on July 3 and also stating that he did not wish to accept the contract which had been offered him for next season. On Wednesday morning this correspondence was referred to me as president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and with sincere regret I accepted Mr. Jacchia's resignation.

"Mr. Jacchia has had the respect and admiration of the Boston public for many years, and no on regrets more than the trustees and the management his decision to shorten his engagement even by one night."

Jacchia Quits; Declaring the Players Allowed Him Are Inadequate

Declaring that despite his protests to the management, he was left with "an unbalanced, and inadequate orchestra" for the closing concerts, Agide Jacchia, conductor of the Boston Symphony "Pops" for ten years, has passed in his resignation, refusing to return next season.

This action is the culmination of considerable friction and internal difficulties in the Symphony Orchestra, first and exclusively made known in the Boston Evening American.

Today, Frederick P. Cabot, president of the trustees, issued a statement that "the orchestra for the closing night this season would be as large and as well-balanced as the orchestra had been during the closing concerts for the last nine seasons which Jacchia has conducted."

HAS ONLY 67 PLAYERS.

This fact was pointed out to Jacchia, according to Mr. Cabot's letter, but the conductor declared that so many musicians had been excused this season that he had only sixty-seven members in the orchestra.

"The reason given for excusing these men was economy," he declared, "or that they might accept positions for the Summer, or go to Europe. Sixty-seven members in the orchestra is not consistent with the advertisements stating that the orchestra consisted of eighty members."

Jacchia then declared that he was through and that he had refused to sign a contract for next season.

REGRETTED BY CABOT.

Mr. Cabot's statement says that "no one can regret more than the trustees and the management Jacchia's decision to shorten his engagement even by one night."

Jacchia has attained considerable fame and popularity during his conductorship of the "Pops." He is also director of the Boston Conservatory of Music. His ten years of service at the Pops is the longest in the records of the orchestra.

Have Summer Engagements

Patrons of the concerts are familiar with the fact that the Pops season generally begins with about ninety of the 107 men in the winter orchestra and ends the ten-week period with nearer seventy, giving a general average of eighty available players. It has been the custom of the management to extend the opportunity to depart on summer engagements or hotel contracts to a limited number of players when the Pops season continues to or through July 4.

To America in 1902

Agide Jacchia first came to America in 1902 as chief assastant to Mascagni, whose pupil he had been at the Conservatory of Music in Pesaro, Italy. In the following five years Mr. Jacchia was conductor at a number of minor opera houses in Italy. The year 1907 brought him back to America, first to be leader of an operatic company in San Francisco, later to conduct in Montreal and New York. He first assumed leadership of the Pop Concerts in Boston in 1917, and has been commonly acepted as the most popular of the musicians who have held that summer post. Mr. Jacchia is director also of the Boston Conservatory of Music. He became an American citizen in 1922.

Jacchia Says Jealousy Weakened Orchestra

Mr. Jacchia declared that a boy who peddled programmes at Symphony Hall a few weeks ago has been run in on the Pops orchestra to play the bassoon, and that a student has been playing the organ. Since the orchestra has been advertised as a Symphony orchestra, he said he considered the employment of a programme boy and a mere pupil was deceiving the public, and he did not intend to be any party to it.

According to present plans Mr. Jacchia will sail for Europe Tuesday, to join his family, who sailed a few weeks ago. But he is coming back to Boston, he says, and he emphatically declared that he will insitute a new series of Pops concerts under his own management next spring in opposition to the Symphony Pops.

Claims Orchestra Inadequate

Mr. Jacchia will conduct the Pops for the last time tonight. He announced yesterday that he will not wield the baton at the closing concert of the season tomorrow night, because he says the management has cut the orchestra too much for the closing concert, to the extent of it being inadequate and unbalanced, he says.

In answer to this charge, Frederick P. Cabot, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, issued a statement yesterday in which he said it had been pointed out to Mr. Jacchia that the orchestra for the closing night would be as large and as well balanced as the orchestra had been during the closing concerts for the last nine seasons which Mr. Jacchia has conducted.

Fiedler to Conduct Tomorrow

"In fact, the orchestra is quite a little larger this week than has been the case in many concerts under Mr. Jacchia. The quality of the membership of the orchestra is well known and needs no defence," the statement further reads.

Manager Brennan announced yesterday afternoon that Arthur Fiedler, a member of the Pops Orchestra, would conduct the closing concert tomorrow night in the absence of Conducter Jacchia.

Says Koussevitzky Jealous

Mr. Jacchia said that his resignation was not a sudden step, but one carefully considered, and taken only when he could not get any definite guarantee from the Symphony management that the Pops orchestra would not be tampered with in the future. For this reason, he said, he refused to sign a contract to conduct the Pops next year.

The chief reason why friction has arisen is because of the jealousy of Serge Koussevitzky over the success of the Pops, Mr. Jacchia declared. Outside Boston, the Symphony orchestra has lost much of its prestige, he said, and therefore Conductor Koussevitzky has been envious of the big success which the Pops have enjoyed.

14 New Players Engaged

Mr. Jacchia explained that during the nine weeks of Pops about 400 orchestrations are played, and it requires players of experience successfully to carry out the programme. At the beginning of the current season he said 14 new players were engaged by Conductor Koussevitzky for the Pops orchestra, none of whom Jacchia knew. This enraged him, he said, because there isn't any time for rehearsals for the Pops, and he did not think it good musical judgment.

Two weeks after the season opened the first trumpet of the orchestra was taken away, he says. He considers the first trumpet the prima donna of the orchestra, and although the player was given his pay for nine weeks he was withdrawn at the end of two weeks, Jacchia charges, because of Koussevitzky's fear that too much success was being attained by the Pops.

Charges His List Ignored

Mr. Jacchia further charged yesterday that he was not considered in the selection of the orchestra members, or in the matter of excusing any of the players to accept other engagements. This practice is not new this season, he said, but has been going on for the past two or three seasons.

At the beginning of the current season Mr. Jacchia says he furnished the management a typewritten list of the pieces he desired held through the entire series. He offered a suggestion that if any of the players were to be excused, his list be adhered to so that the orchestra would not suffer. This list has been ignored, he said, and it was only indirectly he learned that the orchestra was to be inadequate and unbalanced for the closing concert.

Only 67 Players Available

The public is informed, through advertisements, that the orchestra has 80 players, Jacchia said, but he learned that only 67 players were to be available for Saturday night. It wasn't a question of the number of players, so much, however, as the quality of the players and the instruments, he said. No judgment had been shown in reducing the orchestra, he further charged, and added that this was not so much of a shock to him as he considered the management was thinking more of the financial returns than of the quality of the orchestra.

"And it is because I have made the Pops, that I will not stand for the Pops being buried," said Mr. Jacchia.

Drinking Parties Before War

"It is only since the war that the Pops have become so popular from a musical standpoint. Before the war the Pops were hardly more than drinking parties, but since I became conductor I have established a reputation for the Pops which I do not intend to see destroyed while I am conductor," he added.

Issues Statement Claiming Slashing of Orchestra Caused Resignation

FIEDLER CONDUCTS CONCERT ON JULY 3

Agide Jacchia, conductor of the "Pops" concerts for the past ten years, whose resignation was accepted by the directors of the popular concerts yesterday, declared when interviewed at his home on the Fenway last night that he intended returning to Boston next season to open a "Pops" series under his own direction and management.

His resignation he stated came as the result of the refusal on the part of the management to keep a full quota of players, with the result that he felt the concert would be unbalanced and not up to his high standard.

LAST APPEARANCE TONIGHT

He conducted the concert last night and will make his last appearance tonight. Saturday night will find Arthur Fiedler, a member of the Boston Symphony, conducting the last "Pops" concert. Mr. Jacchia said that on Saturday night there will be 67 players present instead of the average of 80.

"I created the Pops after the war, and I refuse to be present and taking part in their burial," he declared when referring to tomorrow night's small number.

"For ten years the 'Pops' have completely filled my life, and for them I live and work. Since last October I have prepared 24 orchestrations, and completed them in March. For this work I received no compensation.

ASKED TO RECALL THE RESIGNATION

"I have condoned the absence of a few players now and then, but allowing so many to leave on Saturday was too much. The management asked me to reconsider my resignation, and I in turn asked them for a promise that such affairs would not take place next year. They told me to forget about the future. I refused."

Mr. Jacchia declared he started the season with 14 men who never played in the "Pops" and that it was impossible to have such men, no matter how good they were, learn the 400 pieces that are played in the nine weeks of the "Pops" in an efficient manner.

"Just imagine, if you can," he continued, "having the organ played by a pupil of music, instead of an accomplished and finished artist. Such is the case, and I even overlooked this action on the part of the management. And to place a young man who has been employed in passing out programs, in the orchestra playing the bassoon, is such a thing imaginable? Such is the case at present.

Old Boston Music Hall Organ To Be Heard Again in Methuen

Famous Instrument, Now in Serlo Hall, a Part of the Edward F. Searles Estate, Was Erected in Ludwigsburg, Germany, at a Cost of $50,000

METHUEN, Mass., June 29 (Special)—Music lovers are manifesting much interest in the announcement that they will be given an opportunity to enjoy selections played upon a famous organ during the two hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Methuen, which is to be celebrated on Saturday, Sunday and Monday, through the courtesy of Arthur T. Walker, who has arranged for the opening of Serlo Hall, in which is installed the famous Boston Music Hall organ, which was rescued from the obscurity of storage and brought to this town some years ago.

The hall itself is a beautiful place with its numerous works of art, standing out among them being the charming bas-relief of Aurora. It is of Carrara marble and was fashioned by Carlo Nicoli, famous Italian sculptor. The Pitti Palace, Florence, Italy, gave Edward F. Searles permision to have a copy made from the famous work.

One of the Finest in World

The old Boston Music Hall organ is called one of the finest in the world, and it is expected that people from miles around will be attracted to the celebration by the opportunity to view the instrument in such harmonious surroundings and to listen to its chords. The organ was originally built by the E. F. Walcker & Co. of Ludwigsburg, Germany, the work starting in 1857. The construction took until 1863. It was built for the Boston Music Hall at considerable expense, the money being raised by subscription through the efforts of J. Baxter Upham, president of the Music Hall Association.

Although the original estimate of the cost was $25,000, the ultimate cost was $50,000. Exhaustive studies of organs throughout Europe were made before a decision was made in regard to the one purchased. The plans were 40 pages long. The problem that followed was a correct organ case, and because of a lack of organ cases to be studied there was some difficulty in reaching a decision. The final plan was supplied by Hammett Billings, which consisted of an outline of the façade, the drawings and the two groups of churches on the tower. The final design was completed by Herter Brothers of New York, and the carving was done by the Royal Academy of Art in Stuttgart.

MICHIGAN BELL WINS WHEN FEDERAL COURT REJECTS STATE PLEA

DETROIT, Mich., June 29 (Special)—Quo warranto proceedings to annul the charter of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company begun in the state Supreme Court by Andrew B. Dougherty, Attorney-General, and sent by that court to the Federal Court for the eastern district of Michigan because of lack of jurisdiction, have been dismissed by Arthur J Tuttle, federal judge.

Granting of this motion to quash proceedings which was presented by Mr. Dougherty resulted from his statement as to the apparent inability of obtaining a decision to dissolve the telephone company or to cancel its charter in the federal court.

In his original brief submitted before the Michigan Supreme Court, Mr. Dougherty contended that the American Telephone & Telegraph Company controls practically all of the stock of the Michigan Bell, and that the latter uses only such equipment as permitted by the parent company, meanwhile paying to the American Telephone & Telegraph Company 4 per cent of its gross receipts.

JACCHIA RESIGNS AS CONDUCTOR OF POPS CONCERTS

Break Comes as Result of Disagreement with Policy of Symphony Management

WILL NOT CONDUCT SATURDAY

President of Board of Trustees Denies Orchestra Is Unbalanced or Inadequate

Agide Jacchia, conductor of the Pops concerts for ten seasons, has resigned his position because of a disagreement with the policy of the Symphony management.

In a statement made this morning by Mr. Jacchia's secretary, it was explained that Mr. Jacchia will not conduct the closing concert of the season, Saturday evening, because the management has excused so many of the musicians that the orchestra will be unbalanced and inadequate. His engagement will terminate with the program of Friday evening. Mr. Jacchia's contract was offered him for next year but has been cancelled because of the disagreement.

The Trustees' Side

At noon the following statement was issued by Frederick P. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

"I have seen a statement made to the press this morning by Mr. Jacchia's secretary relative to Mr. Jacchia's refusal to conduct the closing concert of the present season of Pop concerts.

One of the Finest in World

The old Boston Music Hall organ is called one of the finest in the world, and it is expected that people from miles around will be attracted to the celebration by the opportunity to view the instrument in such harmonious surroundings and to listen to its chords. The organ was originally built by the E. F. Walcker & Co. of Ludwigsburg, Germany, the work starting in 1857. The construction took until 1863. It was built for the Boston Music Hall at considerable expense, the money being raised by subscription through the efforts of J. Baxter Upham, president of the Music Hall Association.

Although the original estimate of the cost was $25,000, the ultimate cost was $50,000. Exhaustive studies of organs throughout Europe were made before a decision was made in regard to the one purchased. The plans were 40 pages long. The problem that followed was a correct organ case, and because of a lack of organ cases to be studied there was some difficulty in reaching a decision. The final plan was supplied by Hammett Billings, which consisted of an outline of the façade, the drawings and the two groups of churches on the tower. The final design was completed by Herter Brothers of New York, and the carving was done by the Royal Academy of Art in Stuttgart.

MICHIGAN BELL WINS WHEN FEDERAL COURT REJECTS STATE PLEA

DETROIT, Mich., June 29 (Special)—Quo warranto proceedings to annul the charter of the Michigan Bell Telephone Company begun in the state Supreme Court by Andrew B. Dougherty, Attorney-General, and sent by that court to the Federal Court for the eastern district of Michigan because of lack of jurisdiction, have been dismissed by Arthur J Tuttle, federal judge.

Granting of this motion to quash proceedings which was presented by Mr. Dougherty resulted from his statement as to the apparent inability of obtaining a decision to dissolve the telephone company or to cancel its charter in the federal court.

In his original brief submitted before the Michigan Supreme Court, Mr. Dougherty contended that the American Telephone & Telegraph Company controls practically all of the stock of the Michigan Bell, and that the latter uses only such equipment as permitted by the parent company, meanwhile paying to the American Telephone & Telegraph Company 4 per cent of its gross receipts.

JACCHIA RESIGNS AS CONDUCTOR OF POPS CONCERTS

Break Comes as Result of Disagreement with Policy of Symphony Management

WILL NOT CONDUCT SATURDAY

President of Board of Trustees Denies Orchestra Is Unbalanced or Inadequate

Agide Jacchia, conductor of the Pops concerts for ten seasons, has resigned his position because of a disagreement with the policy of the Symphony management.

In a statement made this morning by Mr. Jacchia's secretary, it was explained that Mr. Jacchia will not conduct the closing concert of the season, Saturday evening, because the management has excused so many of the musicians that the orchestra will be unbalanced and inadequate. His engagement will terminate with the program of Friday evening. Mr. Jacchia's contract was offered him for next year but has been cancelled because of the disagreement.

The Trustees' Side

At noon the following statement was issued by Frederick P. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra:

"I have seen a statement made to the press this morning by Mr. Jacchia's secretary relative to Mr. Jacchia's refusal to conduct the closing concert of the present season of Pop concerts.

"Last Saturday morning the orchestra's management received a letter from Mr. Jacchia expressing dissatisfaction with the size of the orchestra for the closing concert, July 3. It was at once pointed out to Mr. Jacchia that the orchestra for the closing night this season would be as large and as well balanced as the orchestra had been dur... closing concerts for the ...

Postmaster Roland M. Baker, describing the day as a proud one for the city of Boston, said, "I am very anxious, as you all are, that this service should prove a success at once, first for the sake of the people of Boston, next for the sake of the pioneers who have had the enterprise and the real courage to tackle this very serious problem."

Company.

Two hundred silk dresses, a special purchase made in New York for selling before the holiday, were included in the first cargo of mail received yesterday.

A Gilchrist Company delivery truck was waiting at the airport, and dashed onto the flying field as the first mail plane taxied into "the line." The Gilchrist packages were with the first mail over the side and Joseph Nolan, superintendent of transportation of the postoffice, "delivered" the packages in person to William H. Earle, head of the Gilchrist receiving room.

SILK DRESSES AS SOUVENIRS

Theodore Mayer, head of the apparel departments of the Gilchrist store, opened one of the boxes on the field, and, as a souvenir of the first flight to Boston, presented W. Irving Bullard, president of Colonial Air Transport, Inc., with a silk dress for Mrs. Bullard, and made a like gift to Porter Adams, chairman of the municipal air board of Boston.

The Gilchrist truck in charge of Thomas J. Fitzgerald, superintendent of the Gilchrist Company delivery department, then went straight to the store.

One of the store display windows, at the corner of Winter and Washington streets, had been left empty, waiting for the arrival of the mail. The packages were opened in the window, a large number placed on display, and the remainder taken at once to the dress department on the second floor, where they were placed on sale.

Boston Symphony Players Radiocast Rhapsody in Blue

Agide Jacchia Justifies Inclusion on Program as Product of Genuine Feeling

With so many controversial opinions being expressed by the followers of music on the modern and ultra-modern developments, including jazz, the announcement that George Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" would be played at the Pops Saturday night and radiocast by WEEI suggested a relief measure for this present musical confusion.

This piece, which has been called the first real step in the development of a school of American music, has been called "jazz" by some, and other names by others. Generally, it has proven truly popular. When an orchestra composed of Boston Symphony musicians undertakes to play this piece, it is indeed time to sit up and take notice.

Revolutionary is the word that about describes this step, and as the "maestro" of the Pops concerts is responsible for it, his reasons for this as well as his opinion of the piece are a desirable contribution to the music controversy. Thus this morning found us at the Boston Conservatory of Music ensconced in a roomy armchair while the white-haired, delightful master of the Pops, Agide Jacchia, looked out on us from a pair of mischievous, merry eyes and told us to "open fire."

Before we proceeded to get tangled up in an interview we straightened out the pronunciation of his name, as he deplored the weird combinations he so often hears. With a pencil he printed out the name in simplified form, "Ahjeeda Yahkkeeah" with the accent on the "ah" in the first name and on the "ee" in the last.

Mr. Jacchia is very frank and outspoken. He is forceful, expressive, and always sees the humorous side of a situation. His knowledge of foreign tongues gives his speech some delightful inflections which cannot be reproduced in type, so we shall not attempt it.

As a background to the "Blue" discussion he opened up on the ultra-modernist music and said that he cannot call it music when it departs so far from the rules of harmony. Music is a science as well as an art, and, while certain exceptions may be made and will keep music varied and interesting, one cannot depart too far from the truth in music or it loses its real identity and individuality. He feels that ultra-modern music is artificial, that it is written and played in the mood that impressionistic paintings are painted.

"You want a cloud? Puff! A black spot! That is your cloud. A tree? Swish! the green paint lands on the canvas and you have a tree! So it is with ultra-modern music. We need noise at this point? We will then write down all the percussion and noise-producing instruments in the orchestra. Now a quiet place? Then we will just have a few playing. It makes no difference what they are." Thus he compares painting and music. His quick gestures showed the putting on of the cloud and the "throwing" of the tree.

He berated the descriptive idea applied to music. He said that we can describe a table with the pen or we may paint it "but, please, play for me a table!" A case of "try this on your piano." This point was conceded without argument.

"Now 'Jazz.' What is jazz?" Mr. Jacchia says that it is primarily dance music—sounds produced with a regular given tempo and played by saxophones, muted trumpets, trombones and the clarinet. Then the statement of the day.

"Gershwin's 'Rhapsody in Blue' is not jazz! It is not ultra-modern. It is a true expression of a man's feelings. It comes from the heart—from within. He is an American and that expression was bound to find itself at certain points with some jazz passages. But there are but two in the piece. One for the orchestra and then the piano cadenzas.

"The rest of the piece is almost symphonic. It was, of course, written for a small orchestra, one of the jazz type. Our arrangement is fifty-fifty, half jazz and half symphonic. But if this piece were arranged for a symphony orchestra, it would be almost purely symphonic." At this point we made a resolve to ask Mr. Gershwin to have Mr. Jacchia make a symphonic arrangement of the piece, and we want to place an order for tickets for the first performance right now.

"This music is sincere. It is not a copy of some classical theme. I cannot stand this taking of the music of the masters and making it into dance music.

"It is plagiarism of the worst sort, and should not be allowed. Jazz has its place, and it should conceive its own tunes and arrangements, which will be genuine, rather than have a hybrid piece which can belong to neither one nor the other and is uncomplimentary to both.

"'The Rhapsody in Blue' adheres to the fundamentals of music. I prefer it to 90 per cent of the ultra-modern music that has been produced during the last two or three years." We wished Mr. Gershwin could have heard that.

In preparing for this piece Mr. Jacchia, recognizing the fact that the piece had been written for a jazz orchestra, studied the Paul Whiteman and George Gershwin recordings of the number. On the morning of the rehearsal of his orchestra he brought a phonograph over and had his orchestra listen. "Now," he said, "I want you to try and imitate that as nearly as possible."

Jesus Sanroma, the pianist who plays with this orchestra, also studied the record. This record omits several piano passages due to the limitation of playing time, but these are incorporated in the present arrangement and Mr. Sanroma will be heard in them Saturday night.

"I have three saxophones. I also have the trombones, trumpets and clarinets and I aim to have them imitate the jazz effect, since it is incorporated in this arrangement. In a 45-minute period on the morning of a performance I will often play 10 numbers. On the morning of June 17, when we first played this piece, we worked for the 45 minutes on it alone so much did I want to give a correct interpretation of this unusual piece.

"This will be the first time that this piece has been played by such a large orchestra over the radio and much interest is being shown. We asked Mr. Jacchia how he happened to play it for the first time on Bunker Hill Day, a Massachusetts holiday. We thought that it being a typically American product that this might have been the reason. But no.

"You know the Indian name 'Massachusetts' means 'Blue Hills.' This being a Massachusetts holiday, why not play, 'The Rhapsody in Blue'?" Certainly a unique thought. Those twinkling eyes laughed out on us again at this. And then the delightful closing touch.

"You know my wife says she believes she will stay in Italy next winter after this bad one we had here last year. I shall be quite alone. I must not be idle. I must do something! Therefore, why should I not write a 'Rhapsody in Red and White,' to be played with the 'Rhapsody in Blue'?"

There is the 100 per cent Americanism we read of. Mr. Jacchia has been an American citizen for some years, and the sincerity of his devotion to his adopted country is worthy of being an example to some who were born here.

So when you tune in Saturday night on WEEI, and hear the announcer introduce the "Rhapsody in Blue," you can visualize a lean, active appearing man who has the strength of his convictions, perhaps chuckling to himself as he leads his orchestra in the revolutionary jazz win number, so typically American, his finely molded head, with its wealth of silvery hair, swinging to the strains of the "blues." Unless our guess is wrong, those who listen to dissapprove will be marveling at the end.

face, whereas it took the highest civilization the world has ever known, to realize that beauty of form and figure were at least as important.

Thirty years ago the woman who played games, who used the muscles and limbs she had been born with as they were meant to be used, was looked down upon as hoydenish and rough, inclined to be coarsened by her pursuit of sport.

Nowadays we have changed all that, and our girls are beginning to realize that clean fresh air is the best external skin food there is, and that the heart which beats quickly, when its owner runs and jumps and chases the elusive ball, is the best of beauty doctors.

There are thousands of these true Miamians still in the North whose hearts have been warmed by the golden sun and whose imaginations have been stirred beyond the telling by the loveliness of nature all around them and the blue vault of the heavens above. Unless you know their spirit, you will not know how greatly Miami will build anew.

A week ago the storm struck, driving the waters of the bay and ocean over this town, which called itself the playground of America, crashing houses, destroying villages and exacting a toll of 400 lives and $125,000,000 or more in property damages. Today the relief work in Miami has reached a feverish pitch, and a clearly defined end is evident. Damaged homes are being repaired. The homeless are fed. Salvage work in the harbor, the most desolate spot in Miami, is under way.

LABOR CONSCRIPTED

The streets of Miami are crowded with Red Cross cars, food trucks and cars flying the banner of the citizens' relief committee. Sailors, marines and civil laborers are clambering over the wrecked hulks in the harbor or going down in search of the bodies of the drowned. Carpenters and laborers are being rushed by the truckload to repair the 5000 homes within the city.

It occurred to him all of a heap that as each drowner was drowing for the third time, he seemed to appear to be clutching. And there was NOTHING TO CLUTCH AT!

"If they just had something to clutch at!" thought Mr Whelton, and that night, as he worked at the copy desk in the newspaper office, he thought suddenly of a straw, and the problem was solved.

Mr Whelton would not take money for the straws doled out for clutching purposes, but he soon found two other uses for his invention in which his conscience did not prevent acceptance of financial return. He began selling straws to the weather bureau and to sailors, outfielders and golfers, so they could tell which way the wind was blowing.

And also, along about this time, the sport of camel hunting became quite popular through New England. "The ship of the desert" was very good eating as well as sufficiently foxy and elusive to make the pursuit interesting. New England camels, however, were deathly afraid of horses, horses, horses

FIRST PRIZE TO POLISH CHORUS

International Music Festival at Symphony Hall

Practice makes perfect, and the International Music Festival held at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon was, on the whole, more successfully ordered than any of its three predecessors. There was smoother progress and there were fewer superfluities.

As was the case last year the competing choirs were of two kinds: mixed choruses and male choruses. The former were five in number: German, Portuguese, Finnish, Polish and Armenian; the latter only two, the Dutch and the Swedish.

Acting as judges of the relative merits of these groups, Archibald T. Davison, Thomas Whitney Surette and Malcolm Lang, awarded to the Polish chorus, Anthony Nurczynski, director, the first prize of $250; to the German chorus, Herbert J. Jenny, director, the second prize of $100, and to the Finnish chorus, Mrs. Fred C. Lind, director, the third prize of $50. Of the two male choruses the Swedish singers under August Hulten were adjudged the victors, receiving therefor the single prize of $250.

At the conclusion of the competition all of the choruses united in singing, under the direction of Augustus D. Zanzig, Kremser's "Prayer of Thanksgiving," and under the same leadership choruses and audience sang American patriotic and popular songs.

The presentation of the prizes was made by Governor Fuller, who paid graceful compliments to the singers and to those who had organized the festival. N. Penrose Hallowell was presiding officer. There was a large audience.

MUSIC FESTIVAL HEARD BY 2500

Polish Mixed and Swedish Male Choruses Win in Competition

PRIZES AWARDED BY GOV. FULLER

Matched against four other nationalist choruses, a Polish chorus directed by Anthony Nurczynski won first prize in the mixed chorus competition at the fourth international music festival at Symphony hall yesterday afternoon.

A Swedish chorus led by August Hulten sang their way to victory in the male chorus competition. The prize in each case was $250. Led by Herbert J. Jenny, a German chorus received the second prize, $100, in the mixed chorus singing, and third prize, $50, went to a Finnish chorus under the direction of Mrs. Fred C. Lind.

VOCIFEROUS APPLAUSE

The audience of 2500 persons was most appreciative of the performances of the various groups. Vociferous outbursts of applause were accorded each chorus upon completion of its offering, and similar outpourings of approval greeted the award of prizes.

The judges were Dr. Archibald T. Davison, chairman; Thomas Whitney Surette and Malcolm Lang. The prizes were presented to the directors of the winning choruses by Gov. Fuller. The Governor, speaking briefly, said that while the present immigration laws require all immigrants to evidence a measure of financial responsibility, "we are learning to ask for another requirement, and that is that those coming to our shores should bring with them the culture of their native country."

The festival was under auspices of Community Service of Boston, Inc., and the Women's Municipal League, with the co-operation also of the Women's Cosmopolitan Club and the National Civic Federation.

The presiding officer was N. Penrose Hallowell, member of the firm of Lee, Higginson & Co., a trustee of Boston Symphony orchestra and an overseer of Harvard University.

The winning Polish chorus was composed of members of the Lira Chorus, made up of Polish people of Boston and its vicinity. Its conductor, Mr. Nurczynski, whose home is at 374 Dorchester street, South Boston, is leader of the South Boston Polish band and the Salem Male Chorus.

SWEDES DEFEAT DUTCH

The Swedish chorus that triumphed over a Dutch chorus led by F. W. Stuart, Jr., in the male chorus competition, was composed of the Swedish Glee Club of Boston and the Harmony Male Chorus, both of which are under the direction of Mr. Hulten. He has been leader of the Swedish Glee Club for 25 years. He lives at 27 King street, Dorchester.

The two other choruses in the mixed voices competition were a Portuguese chorus under the direction of Augusto Pimentel, and an Armenian chorus led by Harry H. Ekizian. Each of the five mixed choruses sang "Morning Hymn," by George Henschel, and one native piece of their own selection. The male choruses each sang "Awake, My Pretty Dreamer," by Wilhelm Gericke, and another selection of their own choosing.

The program included also a Washington-Lincoln tableau, and a group of Spanish dances. These latter were given under the direction of Senia Russakoff by the members of the Boston Spanish Club, with string music by the Brookline High School Mandolin club, and Carl Feldman at the piano.

As a grand finale, the seven choruses, under the direction of Augustus D. Zanzig, sang Prayer of Thanksgiving, by Edward Klemser. The audience then joined in singing several selections. The program was opened and concluded with a group of organ selections by Albert W. Snow.

"He gave one of the most extraordinary and engrossing recitals of music that has ever taken place in a N. Y. concert hall. We make no bones about saying that Segovia is one of the most consummate MASTERS of any instrument now before the public. He made the guitar a thing to be spoken of in the same breath with the 'cello of Casals, the violin of Heifetz."—Lawrence Gilman, N. Y. Herald-Tribune, Jan. 9, '28.

"Plays like Poet and Master that he is. Belongs to the very small group of musicians who, by transcendent power of execution, by imagination and intuition, create an art of their own. Wholly exceptional artist, a man of mark among musicians."—Olin Downes, N. Y. Times, Jan. 9, '28.

"He gave one of the most extraordinary and engrossing recitals of music that has ever taken place in a N. Y. concert hall. We make no bones about saying that Segovia is one of the most consummate MASTERS of any instrument now before the public. He made the guitar a thing to be spoken of in the same breath with the 'cello of Casals, the violin of Heifetz."—Lawrence Gilman, N. Y. Herald-Tribune, Jan. 9, '28.

"Plays like Poet and Master that he is. Belongs to the very small group of musicians who by transcendent power of execution, by imagination and intuition, create an art of their own. Wholly exceptional artist, a man of mark among musicians."—Olin Downes, N. Y. Times, Jan. 9, '28.

Introducing a genius—
"Paul Fejos is a name that probably you never heard before. But you will hear it again. Fejos is an extraordinary picture genius. He has made a film, 'The Last Moment,' which in my opinion is one of the outstanding works of cinematic art. And there is not a title in the entire picture. Altho the story is told so plainly that a child could understand it, I FEEL THAT EXHIBITORS WILL STEER SHY OF IT ON ACCOUNT OF ITS SHEER ARTISTRY. But it is a picture that the public should see and that everyone in Hollywood should study."
WELFORD BEATON in the Film Spectator.

Introducing a genius—

"Paul Fejos is a name that probably you never heard before. But you will hear it again. Fejos is an extraordinary picture genius. He has made a film, 'The Last Moment,' which in my opinion is one of the outstanding works of cinematic art. And there is not a title in the entire picture. Altho the story is told so plainly that a child could understand it, I FEEL THAT EXHIBITORS WILL STEER SHY OF IT ON ACCOUNT OF ITS SHEER ARTISTRY. But it is a picture that the public should see and that everyone in Hollywood should study." WELFORD BEATON in the Film Spectator.

Slamming Door in Mecca Hall Is in Perfect Harmony With Modern Music of Symphony

Contemporaneous Compositions Compare Unfavorably With Those of Wagner and Strauss on Same Program---"Parsifal," Paderewski's Recital, and Others Reviewed.

By OLEY SPEAKS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—Walter Damrosch gave a diverting entertainment in Mecca Hall here this week.

The affair was one of the regular weekly concerts of the Symphony Society, but Mr. Damrosch was largely concerned in making this concert of the greatest interest. The program was styled, "Modern Music—Pleasant and Unpleasant."

Mr. Damrosch was in one of his most felicitous moods: his little talks between the different numbers were not only enlightening but at times most amusing. The program put forth in this concert was as follows:

Memories of My Childhood.....
..... Charles Martin Leoffler
Motion—On the Rails—"Pacific 231"
..... Arthur Honneger
Through the Air.....
.....By an older modern composer
Three Orchestral Pieces.....
..... Arnold Schoenberg
First Movement from Sonata for Two Clarinets..... Poulenec
Concerto in D for Violin and Orchestra ..... Prokofieff
Dances—Rag-Time ..... Stravinsky
Nush-Nuschi Tanze....Paul Hindmith
Waltz—By an older modern composer

HERE was a program that showed the modern form of orchestral composition in its every angle. Imagine some of the sounds emanating from Mecca Hall in this concert, as for instance when two gentlemen played clarinets in two different keys at the same time.

Another diverting episode was the accidental slamming of one of the huge doors in Mecca Hall during Stravinsky's "Rag-Time." The bang came in perfect time to the music being played and the noise had quite as much melody to it as that being heard on the stage. The audience roared at this funny incident. The gentleman who composed the Sonata for two Clarinets is a member of the famous aggregation of Parisian modern composers known as "The Six," who take themselves and the music they compose very seriously.

Mr. Damrosch said this music made him feel as if the composer had cornered him and kept repeating that "two and two make five" with such vehemence that he finally gave in, shouting, "Yes, for God's sake, two and two does make five." Of course the audience was in a merry mood during the performance of this drivel by the two gentlemen with clarinets. Mr. Damrosch said the ear was very accomodating—"It is like the back of a donkey; if you whip it enough it become insensible to pain."

Most of the music heard in this concert was positively ugly, actually hurting the ear. An exception was the well-made music of Charles Martin Leoffler and of course the music by "older modern composers." These turned out to be Richard Wagner and Johann Strauss. How the audience did applaud this welcome music after listening to the present-day modernists, and Richard Wagner, 75 years ago, was quite as able to produce music showing motion as is Mr. Honnegger today; also Wagner does it in a melodious manner.

To the writer, most of the music in Prokofieff's Sonata was uninteresting and it seemed a pity to waste the talents of such an able violinist as Paul Kochanski on it. As to the "Rag-Time" of Stravinski, much better rag-time comes from the vicinity of Broadway and the roaring Forties in this city. The "Blue Danube Waltz" brought this program to a close.

It took away the bad taste made by some of the modern music heard and its performance was acclaimed by shouts of approval, thereby showing that most of this audience of 4000 preferred this sort of music. The Symphony Society entered into this program with much interest, playing superbly, and the afternoon was greatly enhanced by the interesting chatter by Mr. Damrosch. He is a pastmaster at this particular form of entertainment.

First Parsifal.

THE first performance of "Parsifal" this season was that given on the afternoon of Thanksgiving day at the Metropolitan. Since the first performance of this work here, some 20 years ago, the opera has been regularly given on Thanksgiving day. Again the operahouse was crowded for the presentation of this masterwork.

The cast was quite the same as in the performances of last year. Clarence Whitehill sang the role of "Amfortas" under difficulties. Several nights before Mr. Whitehill had a bad fall during the duel in "Lohengrin" and appeared in "Parsifal" with his arm in a cast. It may be said that this mishap had no effect upon his voice, for rarely has Mr. Whitehill sung this role with finer effect. It remains one of the finest operatic characterizations to be seen on the Metropolitan stage.

Margaret Matzenauer sang "Kundry," a role suited to this great voice in every way. Curt Tauscher was the "Parsifal" and Paul Bender, "Gurnemanz." The production has never been allowed to deviate from the high standard set many years ago and the hearing of the music cast the usual spell on the capacity audience. Another first performance of the season was that of "Die Meistersinger" this week. From 1:30 in the afternoon to well onto 6 o'clock an audience that crowded the Metropolitan to the last seat, revelled in this operatic masterpiece.

Here is Richard Wagner in one of his greatest flights; music of supreme loveliness whose likeness does not exist. Mr. Whitehill was the "Hans Sachs," Miss Rethberg, "Eva" and Mr. Schützendorf, "Beckmesser." A glorious production is this of "Die Meistersinger" as given by the Metropolitan management. Splendid from the scenic standpoint and sung by most capable artists. The orchestra shone to the finest advantage in the "Prelude," one of the noblest orchestral scores in existence. Mr. Bodanzky conducted the opera with great skill.

WITH the darkened stage and the usual air of expectancy pervading Carnegie Hall, Mr. Paderewski played for the first time this season this week. There is a peculiar glamour anent a Paderewski appearance that is not in evidence at any affairs of like kind. The Paderewski recitals have become traditional affairs. Many of the audience arose when the pianist first came upon the stage and it was some minutes before the audience would let the artist begin his program. This greeting was at once spontaneous and a token of affection for one of the world's greatest artists. The program included Beethoven's 32 variations in C Minor, followed by the same composer's "Walstein" Sonata. Then came Schumann's "Carnaval" and later numbers by Chopin and Stokowski. The regular program was extended a full half hour before the audience would leave the hall.

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra has quite attained the prestige in New York it formerly held in the days of the Karl Muck regime. Pierre Monteux began the restoration of this organization some five years ago. The brilliant conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, has done wonders with the Boston organization in the short time of one year. It stands today as one of the finest orchestras in the world.

Fifteen years ago the concerts given in this city by the Boston orchestra were the outstanding musical events of the musical season. Then came troublesome times for the orchestra in the way of strikes, changes in conductors and what not. The audiences dwindled in size and interest and the prestige of the organization likewise dwindled. Today the subscription list is entirely filled and many are on the waiting list. The orchestra appeared here for the first time this season in Carnegie Hall this week.

The writer missed hearing the Thursday concert but did hear the magnificent performance at the matinee on Saturday. The program was of unusual interest. The first part was given over to Russian music, towit: "Fragment from the Apocalypse," Symphonic Picture, Op. 66, by Liadov, the same composer's "Kikimora," a Folk Fairy Tale and Rimsky-Korsakoff's Suite from the Opera, "Tsar Saltan." The orchestra played with superb skill in this music and Mr. Koussevitzky conducted with great ardor. He has no mannerisms whatsoever, but goes to his work as one who knows exactly what he is about.

Three times during the program the entire orchestra arose to acknowledge the riotous applause. The second part of the program brought the Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C Minor. I have heard many renditions of this symphony by various orchestras under many different conductors, but none finer than was given to it in this concert by the Boston Orchestra. The personnel of the orchestra has undergone many changes since last season. Young blood has been transfused into the ranks of players and a decided improvement in tonal quality and smoothness of performance is easily discerned. A really virtuoso organization is the Boston Orchestra as it now stands, and it is good to record the restoration to its former place in the musical affairs in this country.

Serge Rachmaninoff, eminent Russian pianist-composer, gave a recital here this week. Carnegie Hall housed this event and every inch of space was occupied by the vast audience, which for more than two hours listened to this famous musician. Mr. Rachmaninoff's program embraced Bach's Partita in D Major, Schubert's "Impromptu" and "The Brooklet," Chopin's B Minor Sonata, three Liszt compositions and Mr. Rachmaninoff's transcription of Kreisler's "Liebesfreud." There was the usual enthusiasm shown for the pianist. He is one of the most popular of present-day performers. A great pianist and a great composer, this famous Russian.

Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky Gives Providence Music League Concert at Albee Theatre This Afternoon. Mme. Schumann-Heink Coming.

Through the beneficence of the Providence Music League, subscribers to its concerts will hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky, for about 13 cents this afternoon at the Albee Theatre. Subscribers to the orchestra's regular series here at Infantry Hall pay something more than that. Though it may seem mercenary to speak of art in terms of cash, the monetary contrast is sufficiently startling to be worthy of note.

Mr. Koussevitzky and his players will offer some of the works they have presented here this season. The programme will include Weber's Overture to "Oberon;" Moussorgsky's Prelude to the opera "Khovantchina;" Rimsky-Korsakov's Scherzo, "The Flight of the Bumble Bee;" Grieg's Suite No. 1 from the incidental music to "Peer Gynt," and three Wagnerian excerpts—"The Ride of the Valkyries," Prelude to "Lohengrin" and the Overture to "Rienzi."

This is a programme of great variety and tested popularity, good music and melodious. The opportunity to see Koussevitzky, the Boston orchestra's new leader, and listen to an organization that is considered second to none among symphonic bands in this country, is a fitting climax to the concerts given under the auspices of the Providence Music League this season. The programme is scheduled to commence at 3 o'clock.

Opinions

"The pictures were marvels of photography and color. . . . Many of the scenes awoke the enthusiasm of the audience. They certainly surpassed in beauty—one fading into another—any that have been shown here since Mr. De Cou's visit to Boston a year ago. And his talk was delightful. . . . . It is seldom that pictures, talk and music are so deftly joined—talk that seemed suggested at the moment by this or that scene or adventure—to give rounded and unusual entertainment."—Mr. Philip Hale in the Boston Herald.

"I shall never forget your lecture at the Willard this fall. It was one of the finest talks on the National Parks I have ever heard. Your lecture, the scenes you presented, your music all combined to give us a wonderful evening."
—Horace M. Albright, Director, National Park Service.

"His 'Dream Pictures' reach the level of fine art. Our Art Students and our Faculty received them with equal pleasure and enthusiasm."

"I can't recall when I have enjoyed anything as much as your lecture last week. The effect is as though you were chatting with the audience, and your pictures are simply perfect. It was a wonderful evening for me."

"I have seen two of Mr. De Cou's 'tours.' They proved to be as unusual as they were beautiful. He combines a rare talent for selecting lovely and impressive subjects, and offering them with the most perfect musical scores I have ever heard."—W. Ward Marsh in the Cleveland Plain Dealer.
